SWOT analysis

SBE Group 2
Pierre, Adam, Ivan, Jack, Jaxon, Zahir, Faris

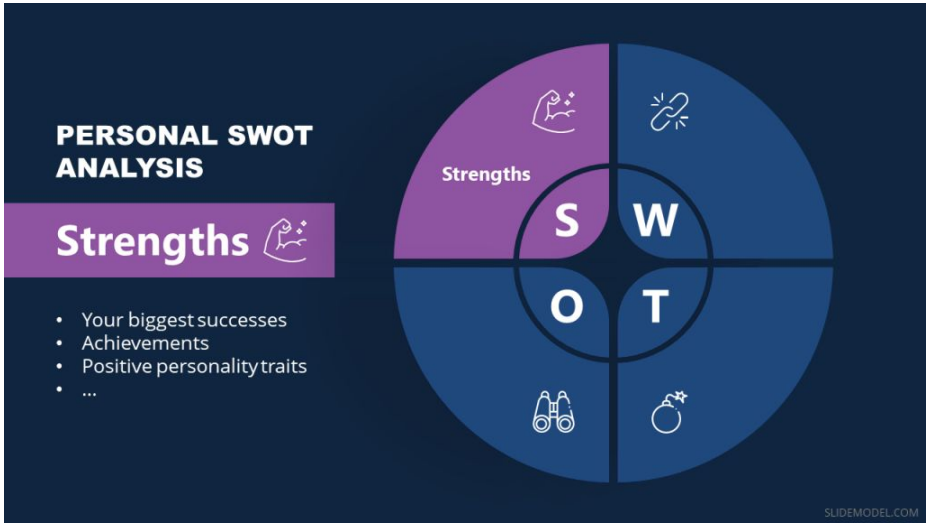

What is SWOT -Pierre

SWOT stands for Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats. It is a two by two grid that organizes and identifies factors to a project that helps with decision making.

Strengths - Ivan

These are characteristics of the business or project that give it an advantage over others. This aspect of your business should remain mostly untouched unless your threats manage to do it better.

Weaknesses - Jack

These are characteristics that place the business or project at a disadvantage relative to others. So generally you want to address this before threats because your threats could exploit your weaknesses making them harder to eliminate.

Opportunities - Zahir

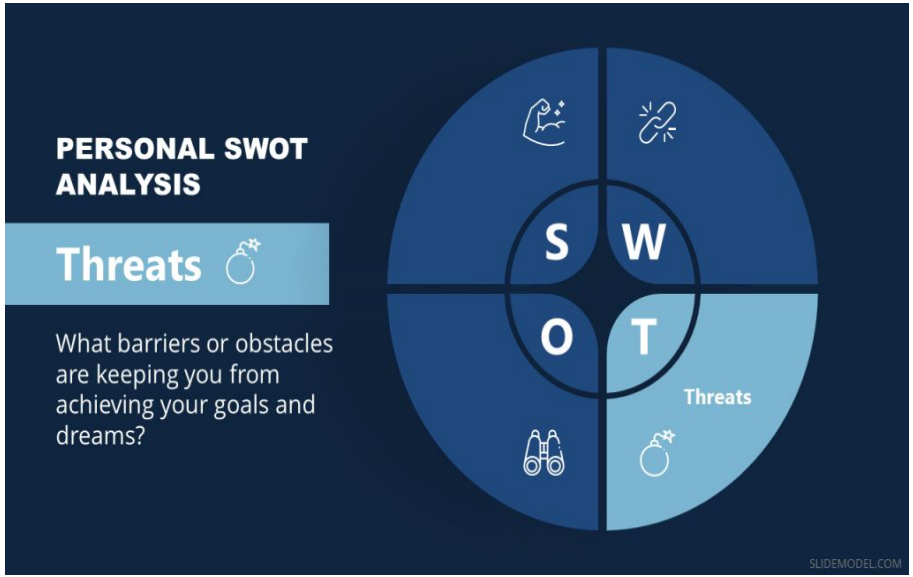

In a SWOT analysis, opportunities are external changes that your organization can use to their advantage to grow and improve performance. For example adapting your product per certain amount of time.

Threats - Adam + Faris

Threats are anything that can hurt the business' profits or productivity. Some examples are competition (business competitors), supply disruption, economic shifts such as inflation, etc.

What does the X axis represent? - Jaxon

The X axis on this scale is Helpful (Negative on the graph) and Harmful (Positive on the graph). When something is helpful to the company, it can either be a Strength or an Opportunity. Strength if it's Internal and Opportunity if it is External. When something is Harmful to the company, it can either be a Weakness or a Threat. If it is internal, it is a Weakness. If it is harmful to the company and external, it is a Threat.

What does the Y axis represent? - Jaxon

The Y axis on this scale is Internal (Positive) and External (Negative). When something is internal to the company, it can either be a strength or a weakness. Strength if it's helpful and Weakness if it is harmful. When something is External to the company, it can either be a threat or an opportunity. If it is helpful, or could be helpful, it is an Opportunity. If it is harmful to the company and external, it is a Threat.

Resources

SWOT analysis